Call 1993

Robert studied at University College London before being called to the Bar in 1993. He was a member of the Chambers of Andrew Trollpoe Q.C. at 187 Fleet Street before joining Exchange Chambers in 2004. In London he regularly prosecuted on behalf of the National High Tech Crime Squad and the Metropolitan Stolen Vehicle Unit. He is now based in Liverpool but his practice takes him across the North of England and North Wales.

Robert practices in the areas of criminal law and employment law. He is also regularly instructed to defend police officers in internal misconduct proceedings and criminal proceedings by the National Federation of Police Officers. He is also instructed to prosecute doctors on behalf of the General Medical Council at Interim Orders Panel Hearings and Fitness to Practice Hearings.

Robert is also experienced in prosecuting cases on behalf of Local Authorities under Health and Safety legislation as well as prosecuting for the Environmental Protection Agency and for the NSPCA.

Robert regards client care as a particular responsibility in any case in which he is instructed. Whether a case is ultimately won or lost Robert considers it very important that lay-clients are fully involved at all stages of proceedings. He considers it his responsibility to ensure that at the end of any case the client understands fully why a case has progressed in the way that it has and that the client knows that all that reasonably could have been done was done.
