Environmental Regulation

Overview

John has extensive knowledge and experience of this complex area of law. He was initially appointed by the Attorney-General in 2003 to prosecute cases on behalf of the Environment Agency both in the Magistrates and Crown Court. Since then he has moved into defending both individuals and large companies in the Criminal Courts. He has a wealth of experience in presenting cases in criminal cases and uses his experience in front of juries in other criminal cases for the benefit of his lay clients. He has an approachable manner, and feels that it is important to be able to explain complex areas of law in a way that clients understand. His knowledge and experience allows him to get the best results for his clients.

In a very recent case involving breaches of the Environmental Permitting Regulations, he was praised by the judge for his handling of the case and was able to secure a nominal fine of £1000 for his client.

He has a particular interest in “waste” and “water pollution” cases as well as “statutory nuisance” cases brought by Local Authorities. He also advises Local Authorities and Companies in relation to “Air Pollution” cases. He is adept at dealing with large POCA cases which invariably follow in these cases.

Recommendations

“He is extremely diligent and meticulous, with a real ability to think outside the box. He is courteous and respectful to his clients and solicitors alike, a real team player. I can find nothing to be critical of.”

Leading Junior: Legal 500 2015

In an article on “Who reigns over the Regions” in the Lawyer Magazine he was described as “having an ability to communicate, not only with the client, but also with judges and solicitors”.

In a recent case involving the rape of a 13 year old girl, the senior criminal partner at Allington Hughes said: “I was very impressed with John’s tenacity and willingness to challenge aspects of the prosecution which others would have perhaps have left untouched. As always John’s advocacy was very persuasive and his client care was faultless.”

Beyond the Bar

John enjoys walking in the mountains of his native Wales and welcomes any instructions from those who wish to be represented in Welsh.
